

It is apparent that many Americans were disturbed by the Super Bowl Half-Time show of 2/1/04. However, the widespride disapproval should not lessen the importance of individual complaints. At the time of Ms. Jackson's "malfunction", I was seated in front of the television with my four-year-old son in my lap. Not only do I think the stunt was rude, offensive and insulting the intelligence of the American people, I also do not appreciate having to explain to a four-year-old little boy "why that man ripped that lady's shirt" and of course, "what popped out of there?" Investigating the incident is all well and good, but the damage has been done. All those involved should be ashamed and the American people deserve more than a politcally-correct apology.